DENVER, CO—The Denver Arthritis Clinic, a large rheumatology practice located in Denver, Colorado, has opened a new Infusion Center at its 200 Spruce Street location in the Lowry campus.

The new state-of-the-art infusion center helps patients who require complex biologic infusion therapies on an outpatient basis. The center provides a safe, comfortable, cost-effective alternative to treatments delivered in a hospital or home care setting. The DAC currently administers: Boniva, ReClast, Orencia, Remicade and Rituxan.

"The opening of our new center is a significant extension of DAC's services and offers patients increased access and another option for their infusion treatments," explained Kenneth Glassman, MD, Director of the Infusion Center. "We want their experience to be as pleasant as possible."

A great advantage to the Infusion Center is that it is inside the Denver Arthritis Clinic. This adds tremendous convenience for patients who need to receive treatment before or immediately following their physician visit. Other helpful amenities include refreshments like coffee, tea, juice and snacks, as well as free wireless internet access.

The Infusion Center is staffed by registered nurses and nurse assistants who work closely with physicians to coordinate patient treatment. The DAC staff will pre-certify and pre-authorize insurance for each infusion patient.

"We are so proud to have two infusion centers that offer a safe, comfortable, and quiet setting for our patients to receive the necessary treatments," concluded Sherrie Broderson, Supervising RN for the Infusion Center.

The DAC Infusion Center is located at 200 Spruce Street, Suite 100, and is open Monday through Friday, from 7 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.
